

Associate in Health Information Technology

Associate-level programs offer different degrees for a variety of careers. These 2-year programs may provide the necessary training to prepare students for entry-level positions in fields like nursing, graphic design and other vocational areas.

An Associate in Health Information Technology (HIT) degree provides a path to entry-level jobs in the vital field of health information management.

The vast healthcare industry needs professionals to manage the enormous volume of patient and institutional information. Health information technicians help health information administrators in organizing and managing records, storing medical records, and creating reports.

Health information technicians typically work with computers and electronic health records. As a result, they typically have little contact with patients.
