

Doctoral degree programs, also known as Ph.D. programs, are the most advanced type of degree program available. Admittance into a doctoral degree program may require individuals to hold a master's degree.

A Doctor of Health Administration offers training for those wishing to achieve the highest levels of healthcare management. Specific coursework includes study of human resource management, risk management, healthcare policies and regulations, and the evaluation of certain healthcare programs. You will learn the most effective and proven methods of administration within the healthcare setting, but will also conduct research of your own. The goal will be to improve your ability to design new models of efficiency for the healthcare system and how best to implement such models. Analytical, critical, and creative thinking will be involved as you look to problem-solve on a large-scale basis. Your communication, teamwork, and leadership skills will also receive considerable attention, as will your ability to plan and implement change. Added sensitivity to ethics and values will be cultivated as well.

By completion of the coursework you will possess a greater understanding of what is involved in leadership at the highest levels of even the most complex healthcare institutions. You will be better able to work with employees and other professionals to analyze such institutions, propose improvements, and work toward implementing those improvements smoothly, efficiently, and effectively.

This major will prepare you for:

The degree of Doctorate of Health Administration opens the door to the most advanced levels of management in the healthcare community. You may pursue careers in hospital administration or in management at other business that deal heavily in healthcare-related issues. Research and teaching opportunities are also available at colleges and universities.

Schools That Offer Associate in Accounting

A nonprofit, regionally accredited higher education institution, Pacific Oaks offers bachelor's completion and master's programs in a variety of fields, including Human Development, Marriage and Family Therapy (MFT), Education, Early Childhood Education (ECE), Teacher Credentialing, and Organizational Leadership.